—The smallest restaurant in the world is no more. Literally it used to be a hole in the wall in Minneapolis, Minn. It was hardly big enough for two. It had no seats, no kitchen, no waitress, no tablecloths—not even a toothpick holder. About all it did have was a cook, one set of salt and pepper shakers, a gas plate, a coffee pot—and a large and healthy jinx. It was the jinx that brought misfortune to almost every one of the proprietors. The restaurant was exactly three by eight feet. It was in a coop left vacant when curb gas filling stations were abolished. It was on the street level, and on its door were the words, "Come In," in chalk. There was room for but one customer at a time. Cook and customer alike used the set of salt and pepper shakers. The men's club of a church founded the place. The first proprietor, an aged man who had cooked church suppers worked up a good trade. Illness made him quit. The next proprietor, an elderly woman, also had a good good business until she fell one night and broke a leg. One owner after another came, but bad luck always drove them out. The last one a young widow, was eliminated by matrimony, and whether that still was the jinx working or not none of the merchants nearby would veuture a guess.

TRAFFIC LIGHT CHANGE ASKED BY CIVIC BODY

Chamber of Commerce Also Discusses Downtown Parking at Regular Meeting

Importance of Circleville merchants and business men co-operating in keeping the streets of the downtown section free of unnecessary parking of their own automobiles, in favor of the out-of-town shopper, was again stressed at the meeting of the Chamber of Commerce on Tuesday night.

The right of a business house to have a restricted parking area for its own use was recognized. The traffic committee gave the information that such areas can be obtained through application to the police department of the city. The police power, also extends, it was learned, to preventing unreasonable parking if formal complain is made.

It was the consensus of opinion among the Chamber of Commerce members that solving of this parking problem would not be made a legal issue, but that its solution would be sought in the business men's sense of fair play and in their spirit of co-operation.

If the Chamber of Commerce has its way, traffic will have less difficulty with the safety lights. Efforts will be made to have the flashes of the various beacons alternated and to have the timing of the light changes speeded up. By this method it is hoped to avoid the unnecessary waits and the usual speeding up at street intersections to "beat the red."

It was announced that the Circleville High School orchestra will provide the program for next week's meeting. Ed. Sensenbrenner will have charge of the ticket sale.

CHARGING PACT OF PARTIES ON THEIR FUNDS

Latest Oil Developments Hint Agreement Between Treasurers of Factions.

WASHINGTON, March 21 —As a sidelight to its search for the Continental Trading company's $3,080,000 "slush fund" the senate oil inquiry today centered upon the existence of an alleged agreement between the national treasurers of the Republican and Democratic parties to conceal all campaign contributions in 1923.

This inquiry divided attention with the pending battle in the senate to force the resignation of Andrew W. Mellon as secretary of the treasury. A four year old feud was seen behind the action of Senator James Couzens (R) of Michigan, in sponsoring a resolution, demanding Mellon's resignation.

The fate of the resolution was in some doubt, with its adoption or rejection depending largely on the attitude of Democrats. A strong Democratic - insurgent coalition could force its adoption under the present political alignments in the senate but administration leaders believe the resolution would not command united Democratic support, thus insuring its defeat.

Mellon was attacked on the ground he concealed for four years his handling of $50,000 of the bonds, given the Republican party by Harry F Sinclair to pay off its 1920 deficit Couzens also charged Mellon with many irregularities in handling tax matters and with holding office in defiance of the law. The latter were old charges, which Mellon has weathered successfully in the past.

Bullet Riddled Bodies of Ben Nadel and Unidentified Companion Found.

CLEVELAND, March 21 —(INS) — Morris "Ben" Nadel, the man who arranged a "ride-out" for Pat McDermott, following the Don R Mellett murder at Canton and a companion, not yet identified, were shot and killed near Willoughby, east of Cleveland, early today by two youthful assailants, who escaped.

The two bodies were found in the front seat of Nadel's Lincoln sedan, parked in an isolated section of Lost Nation Road. The man identified by Cleveland detectives as Nadel, had been shot sixteen times while the youth with him was struck by eleven bullets. Portions of each man's face had been shot away. Nadel was clumped over the wheel with the other victim leaning against him.

The only clue to the identity of the killers was furnished by Marshal James Maloney, of Willoughby, who said two strange youths stopped at a Willoughby all-night restaurant shortly before 2 o'clock this morning

Nadel, under penitentiary sentence after being convicted of harboring McDermott, who is now serving a life sentence for Mellett's murder, was at liberty on bond of $35,000 pending an appeal.

The companion, it was said, resembled Dan Pfaff, also of Cleveland, who testified at Nadel's trial. Several persons who knew Pfaff, were unable to say positively that he was the dead man, however.

HOOSIER MESS NEEDS PROBE, EDITOR SAYS

Four Charges of Political Corruption Made in Letter to Senator Capper.

INDIANAPOLIS, March 21 —(INS) —Alleging that the Indiana political scandal is of federal concern, Thomas H. Adams, crusading Vincennes publisher, here today wrote an open letter to United States Senator Arthur Capper of Kansas, requesting a congressional investigation of the Hoosier tangle.

"I ask you to present our case to congress for complete investigation. As there are many federal wrongs that must be corrected," Adams' letter said.

The Vincennes newspaper man listed the following charges as being of interest to federal investigators:

"1. The famous black boxes of D. C. Stephenson, who was the political ruler of Indiana, contain contracts he made with two congressmen for political patronage.

"2. Bonded whisky, of an estimated value of $100,000 was removed illegally from the federal building at Indianapolis to be used for political purposes.

"3. Irregular procedure was used in the indictment of John D. Williams, director of the Indiana highway commission with an attempt to frame a federal case against him, involving federal aid in the highway system and the sale of surplus war materials.

"4. Stephenson and others formed a conspiracy to obtain the appointment of a federal judge and other officials in exchange for the support of Stephenson's machine.

BAN PLACED ON RACING STABLE OF OIL BARON

Teapot Dome Scandal Reflected in Turf World By Track Body's Action.

BALTIMORE, March 21—(INS) —The long arm of the national oil scandals reached even into the racing world today.

Harry F. Sinclair's great stable of horses will not be permitted to perform on Maryland tracks this spring because of the "adverse criticism" which the oil magnate has been subjected to in the investigate revelations.

The Maryland racing commission, which exercises czar-like power over the four big tracks in Maryland, Bowie, Laurel, Pimlico and Harve de Grace, has advised track officials by formal letter not to allow Sinclair's horses to start in this state.

Sinclair's Rancocas stable is one of the largest racing establishments operated in the United States, being comparable to the Whitney establishments. The oil magnate has sent many famous horses to the races, including the world's famous "Zev" which cleaned up American tracks several years ago, and defeated Papyrus, the English crack, in the sensational international event

The oil magnate had already nominated three of his colts for the preakness, which is to eastern racing what the Kentucky derby is to the western racing world. He also had nominated entries in other stake events in Maryland this spring

One day is a mighty short time to win a prize. At the end of that time the big special offer will be closed. The largest special offer that will be given during the campaign will come to an end Thursday, at 8 p. m. All the future offers will be smaller than this. If you can get more votes than at any other time, then naturally now is the time to make the hours count. Why delay, if this is your best chance to win big bonus votes? Why not take advantage of this prize winning opportunity and carry away your favorite prize? Some will say, "Are the prizes worth working for?" Go to the different places where the prizes were purchased and examine them yourself and see if you would not be willing to spend a little of your spare time getting your friends to subscribe for the Herald or Weekly Union-Herald.

The Buick sedan and Chevrolet sedan, two really dependable automobiles backed by local dealers and a well-known factories are cars that have made phenomenal records during the last few years and now come out better than ever before and the candidates who wins one of these will own one of the best cars to be found any where.

HOOSIER MESS NEEDS PROBE, EDITOR SAYS

Four Charges of Political Corruption Made in Letter to Senator Capper.

INDIANAPOLIS, March 21 —(INS) —Alleging that the Indiana political scandal is of federal concern, Thomas H. Adams, crusading Vincennes publisher, here today wrote an open letter to United States Senator Arthur Capper of Kansas, requesting a congressional investigation of the Hoosier tangle.

"I ask you to present our case to congress for complete investigation. As there are many federal wrongs that must be corrected," Adams' letter said.

The Vincennes newspaper man listed the following charges as being of interest to federal investigators:

"1. The famous black boxes of D. C. Stephenson, who was the political ruler of Indiana, contain contracts he made with two congressmen for political patronage.

"2. Bonded whisky, of an estimated value of $100,000 was removed illegally from the federal building at Indianapolis to be used for political purposes.

"3. Irregular procedure was used in the indictment of John D. Williams, director of the Indiana highway commission with an attempt to frame a federal case against him, involving federal aid in the highway system and the sale of surplus war materials.

"4. Stephenson and others formed a conspiracy to obtain the appointment of a federal judge and other officials in exchange for the support of Stephenson's machine.

BAN PLACED ON RACING STABLE OF OIL BARON

Teapot Dome Scandal Reflected in Turf World By Track Body's Action.

BALTIMORE, March 21—(INS) —The long arm of the national oil scandals reached even into the racing world today.

Harry F. Sinclair's great stable of horses will not be permitted to perform on Maryland tracks this spring because of the "adverse criticism" which the oil magnate has been subjected to in the senate revelations.

The Maryland racing commission, which exercises czar-like power over the four big tracks in Maryland, Bowie, Laurel, Pimlico and Harve de Grace, has advised track officials by formal letter not to allow Sinclair's horses to start in this state.

Sinclair's Rancocas stable is one of the largest racing establishments operated in the United States, being comparable to the Whitney establishments. The oil magnate has sent many famous horses to the races, including the world's famous "Zev" which cleaned up American tracks several years ago, and defeated Papyrus, the English crack, in the sensational international event.

The oil magnate had already nominated three of his colts for the preakness, which is to eastern racing what the Kentucky derby is to the western racing world. He also had nominated entries in other stake events in Maryland this spring.

DUST ON SEED CORN CUTS TOLL OF SMUT

Treatment Increases Yield at Cost of 5 Cents An Acre, Is U. S. Test Finding.

Toll levied on the corn yield by seed-borne seedling blight organisms, can be materially reduced at a cost of 5 cents an acre, it has been announced by cereal pathologists of the United States Department of Agriculture. Tests have resulted in increased yields of from one to 12 bushels an acre after treating the seed corn with chemical dust. The disinfectant was mixed with dry shelled seed corn at the rate of 2 ounces to the bushel. The dust is applied with a mixing machine of the type used in treating seed wheat for rust, with copper carbonate. An ordinary barrel or oil drum mounted on an axis will serve, as will a barrel churn. The seed can be treated any time before planting, but should be stored in a safe place because the dust is poisonous.

Three dust disinfectants are commercially available at the present time. Others have been tested, however, and found effective. The names of the dusts and the firms through which they may be obtained, can be secured through Circular 34-C, which may be had from the United States Department of Agriculture.

At the Illinois experiment station, where some of the tests were carried on, seed that was known to be diseased, yielded 47.5 bushels an acre when untreated, and 59.5 bushels an acre when treated. The gain was 12 bushels an acre. At the same station, seed that was pronounced good, made a yield of 63.2 bushels without treatment, and 65.1 bushels when treated. The tests showed both the advantage of using good seed when possible and the benefit derived from treating diseased seed when it must be used.

Chinese Telegraphy

The transmission and receipt of telegrams in China is not so easy as in western countries, because the Chinese language lacks an alphabet and expresses itself by characters and signs that represent words. In consequence, for purposes of telegraphing an exact list has been made of signs in quantity sufficient for ordinary correspondence, and to each one of the signs a different number is given, which is transmitted by the Morse telegraphic system. The code consists of 9,800 ciphers, the whole forming a pamphlet of 49 pages, each one of which contains 10 series of 20 characters with its corresponding number. On receipt of a telegram the operator looks up in his book the characters represented by the numbers transmitted by the apparatus and transcribes them into legible Chinese.

Stamped the Letter

Saralou, age four, was on her way with her mother to mail a letter to daddy. As they approached the post office, Saralou, who carried the letter, ran to put it in the box. Her mother, knowing it was unstamped, called to her young daughter: "Saralou, the letter must be stamped before you mail it, or daddy will never get it."

Saralou looked inquiringly into her mother's eyes. Then without much hesitation, she placed the letter on the sidewalk, and with all the wild enthusiasm of a four-year-old, jumped up and down with both feet upon the letter. Thinking it had been stamped sufficiently, Saralou picked it up and said in most assuring and convincing tones, "Muvver, I stamped it; now daddy will get it, won't he?"—Indianapolis News.

DUST ON SEED CORN CUTS TOLL OF SMUT

Treatment Increases Yield at Cost of 5 Cents An Acre, Is U. S. Test Finding.

Toll levied on the corn yield by seed-borne seedling blight organisms, can be maternally reduced at a cost of 5 cents an acre, it has been announced by cereal pathologists of the United States Department of Agriculture. Tests have resulted in increased yields of from one to 12 bushels an acre after treating the seed corn with a chemical dust. The disinfectant was mixed with dry shelled seed corn at the rate of 2 ounces to the bushel. The dust is applied with a mixing machine of the type used in treating seed wheat for rust, with copper carbonate. An ordinary barrel or oil drum mounted on an axis will serve, as will a barrel churn. The seed can be treated any time before planting, but should be stored in a safe place because the dust is poisonous.

Three dust disinfectants are commercially available at the present time. Others have been tested, however, and found effective. The names of the dusts and the firms through which they may be obtained, can be secured through Circular 84-C, which may be had from the United States Department of Agriculture.

At the Illinois experiment station, where some of the tests were carried on, seed that was known to be diseased, yielded 47.5 bushels an acre when untreated, and 59.5 bushels an acre when treated. The gain was 12 bushels an acre. At the same station, seed that was pronounced good, made a yield of 63.2 bushels without treatment, and 65.1 bushels when treated. The tests showed both the advantage of using good seed when possible and the benefit derived from treating diseased seed when it must be used.

Chinese Telegraphy

The transmission and receipt of telegrams in China is not so easy as in western countries, because the Chinese language lacks an alphabet and expresses itself by characters and signs that represent words. In consequence, for purposes of telegraphing an exact list has been made of signs in quantity sufficient for ordinary correspondence, and to each one of the signs a different number is given, which is transmitted by the Morse telegraphic system. The code consists of 9,800 ciphers, the whole forming a pamphlet of 40 pages, each one of which contains 10 series of 20 characters with its corresponding number. On receipt of a telegram the operator looks up in his book the characters represented by the numbers transmitted by the apparatus and transcribes them into legible Chinese.

D. A. R. at Crites Home

The regular meeting of the Pickaway Plains Chapter, Daughter of the American Revolution, was held Monday afternoon, March 19, at the home of Mrs. Ella Crites, East Main street, with Mrs. W. T. Ulm, Mrs. Adrian Yates, Miss Charlotte Phelps and Miss Mary L. Wilder, assisting hostesses.

The meeting was called to order with the Salute to the Flag. Mrs. J. B. Stevenson read a paper entitled, "Strange Colonial Laws," and after hearing of these laws and the penalties for offences against them, one feels very grateful that one is living in this day and age.

Mrs. W. T. Ulm read an intensely interesting paper which she had written on the subject, 'The Cure of Souls." In this paper she showed that it is a fact that the cure of sick souls is just as necessary as the cure of sick bodies.

The Regent read excerpts from a book, published by the Paul Revere Chapter of Muncie, Indiana, on the life and works of George Rogers Clark, a much neglected man in the early histories of this country. Two copies were ordered by the Pickaway Plains Chapter, one to be placed in the public library and the other in the high school library. All public schools of Indiana are compelled to include this history in their curriculum.

Mrs. Felix Caldwell and Mrs. Clark Hunsicker gave splendid reports of the state conference held in Cleveland, March 13-16, which they attended as delegates from this chapter. It was announced at this conference that the Sesqui-Centennial committee, had presented to Gov. Donahey for the state of Ohio, the replica of the home of William Henry Harrison which was at the Sesqui-Centennial celebration at Philadelphia. Governor Donahey presented the building to the Daughters of the American Revolution of Ohio. The building is to stand on the State Fair grounds, to be furnished throughout with Colonial furniture such as was in vogue in Willam Henry Harrison's time and the building is to be open for inspection each year during the State Fair.

The chapter has been given permission by the owner of the land, to erect a suitable marker at the site of Camp Charlotte. Plans are under way for the erection of the marker to be dedicated with appropriate ceremonies in the early spring this year.

Light refreshments were served by the hostesses during the social hour. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Orion King, Tuesday evening, April 17, at 7:30 o'clock.

W. C. T. U. In Ashville

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Pickaway county, held an all day Institute at Ashville, Ohio, March 16, 1928.

The County President, Mrs. Lucy B. Price, presided at the meeting.

The meeting opened with singing several selections and the scripture reading. Plan of work for 1928 was then discussed. Reports of the county director showed that splendid work is being done in every department They dismissed for noon and enjoyed a "box lunch" in the basement of the church. Executive meeting was held at 1 o'clock Some very important subjects were discussed.

The afternoon session opened by singing and prayer. An exercise by Columbia and a number of W. S. presidents, ten ladies taking the different parts, was very impressive. The following topics, "Why A Dry Candidate For President" "Party Candidate or Dry Candidate. Which?" "Our Primaries," were very ably ydiscussed by several ladies.

A Silver Medal Contest was held in the evening. The pageant by the Loyal Temperance Legion band was fine, much credit is due their leader, Miss Altha Pierce. It was a fine lesson for the young folks. The following ladies took part in the contest:

Mrs. Val Valentine, Tarlton.
Miss Mary Harpster, Kingston.
Mrs. Anna C. Hedges, and Mrs. Nelle Quillen, of Ashville.

Mrs. Hedges won the medal. The judges said it was very hard to decide the winner.

The fine musical selections by the High school orchestra, under the direction of Miss Crook, and the solos by Miss Opal Reed and Miss Elizabeth Hay, were greatly enjoyed by every one present. Thus ended a very successful W. C. T. U. meeting. The members wish to thank every one who helped to make it a success.

Magpie's Many Virtues

The magpie, which is quite common on the plains and mountains of the West, has many excellent qualities and as many bad ones. As an insect eater the magpie surpasses the crow and all other members of the same family. Destructive weevils, caterpillars and grasshoppers characterize its insect food, which forms nearly 26 per cent of its diet. The magpie also eats a limited number of small rodents, and as a carrion feeder it does additional good. The magpie has, however, some outstanding faults. It is guilty of the destruction of poultry and beneficial wild birds and their eggs, and at times becomes a pest on the cattle ranch by its attacks on sick, injured or weak live stock. There are times when the birds gather in such large numbers that it becomes necessary to kill off some of them.

LILLIAN bent over the queer marks upon the thin paper which we had taken from the secret compartment of Eleanor Lincoln's miniature, and after inspecting them carefully, shook her head at my question.

"I haven't your memory," she said. "It seems to me I've seen something resembling them before, but I'm no code expert. If Allen Drake were here now."

"It was when he was here before that I saw marks like these," I said, my excitement steadily mounting as the memory of a terrific struggle and a wonderful victory came back to me. "Don't you remember the man who called himself Smith and the plot against the Govern-with——"

"Against all governments," Lillian amended. "There was nothing small about that lad."

"I know," I said impatiently, "and don't you remember that we found a thin paper like this all covered with——"

"With characters from some dead language or other," Lillian interrupted excitedly, "that you were able to work out because you once had studied those old inscriptions with some decayed old professor who'd forgotten anything had happened since the time the characters were cut in the stone. Of course, I remember. You don't mean to tell me that these are the same sort of characters!"

"They are Sumerian, certainly," I returned, "but of course it would take days, perhaps weeks of work, to decipher the code."

"But how long would it take you to copy it line for line, dot for dot, just as the thing stands there?"

I looked the paper over carefully. "To copy and check, about an hour," I estimated.

"Get at it then, pronto," she commanded. "Do you want me here, or would you rather I held the fort downstairs and insured you against interruption?"

"Downstairs, if you don't mind," I told her smiling.

"In other words, get out and make it snappy," she said as she moved toward the door. "But I'm not proud, and this is manna straight from Heaven. Let me know as soon as you're through. I want to send off a code message."

That she was tremendously excited by the discovery of these characters used several years before in a code, which masked the secret plans of an especially diabolical set of plotters against the Government, I saw clearly. But my own excitement transcended hers. The deciphering of that code for Allen Drake had been the most signal triumph of my secret diplomatic work. In every thing else I had been only a very humble helper of Lillian's. But in that one instance it had been my knowledge of those old Sumerian characters, which had solved the whole problem for the Government investigators.

I could not believe that the characters before me had anything to do with a plot such as the others had masked. If our theory concerning the identity of Eleanor Lincoln were true, she would be the last person in the world to be in possession of a code connected with a revolutionary plot. But I had great faith in Lillian's hunches, and she evidently expected surprising and valuable revelations when I should decipher the meaning of the characters.

That was a long way off, I told myself sharply, as with pen and paper I set myself to the task of copying the characters. Mine is a single-track mind, and I knew that if I permitted it any speculation upon the meaning of the characters my copying might not be accurate. So I forced myself to consider only the exact reproduction of the lines and dots upon the thin paper.

Purposely I had named twice the time that I needed, for I wished to make two copies that I might always have one in reserve while working upon the other. And when two copies were made and each checked three times for errors, I locked them away in my desk, folded the paper exactly as it had been done originally and inserted it again into the cavity at the back of the miniature. Then, with a word to Lillian and bearing the chain pendant and miniature in my bag, I had Jim drive me again to The Larches. I intended to run no risk of dropping that bag until I had restored Eleanor Lincoln's treasure to her.

A Shampoo for the Blonde

By JOSEPHINE HUDDLESTON

ONE of the most important things the blonde has to contend with is the ever-present fear of the hair turning darker—a natural process as one grows older. Nothing except constant vigilance of the right kind can prevent this catastrophe, which is ruinous to blonde hair.

Bleaches of various sorts often hold out glittering promise to the blonde-haired woman, but this remedy frequently brings an entirely new set of hair troubles, such as breaking off, streaking and dryness, all of them needing further treatment, so that after all is said and done drastic bleaching methods are not the most satisfactory way of keeping blonde hair light.

After experimenting about for several years I finally evolved a shampoo which has been extremely successful, and I want to tell you about it today. The shampoo should be made up at home so that only the best ingredients are used and directions should be followed exactly for the best results.

To one pint of cold water add one bar of finely shaved lemon soap (use any good brand of lemon soap which you find at reliable stores) and one-eighth of a teaspoonful of powdered borax. Let this simmer over a slow fire until the mixture is dissolved; then strain it through two layers of cheese cloth and set it aside to cool. When cool it will be in jelly form and the amount should be sufficient for three or four shampoos. Keep it in a jar that can be sealed when not in use.

Now, then, to the amount of jell used for one shampoo add the white of one egg that has been beaten until stiff, folding it into the jelly with a fork. Use as you would any shampoo medium.

The lemon rinse should be used to finish off the shampoo and this is made by adding the strained juice of two lemons to one glass of cool water. After the final rinsing in clear water pour the lemon water over the hair, permitting it to dry.

This shampoo is absolutely harmless in every way and it will keep blonde hair in perfect condition if used once each week.

Last Straw

Two men by the same name in a little Ohio town were always getting confused. One was a minister and the other a lawyer, and the lawyer was constantly being annoyed with calls intended for the minister. Night after night this would get phone calls from couples wishing to get married, until it got on his nerves.

One night, close onto twelve, the lawyer got the usual call. "Would you mind marrying us tonight?"

"Yes!" shouted the lawyer, "I'm busy writing the other Smith's Sunday sermon."

Papal Claim Still Stands

In 1871 the Italian government absorbed as part of the territory of Italy much of the property over which the pope of Rome had exercised and claimed jurisdiction and possession. The Italian government placed to the credit of the Vatican a sum of money and certain guaranties which have not been accepted by the Roman authorities. It is said that the Italian government is anxious to adjust the matter, but so far the papal claim has not been diminished, which is temporal power or jurisdiction over the disputed territory.

Name of Sing Sing

The name of Sing Sing prison and also the name of the adjacent village, Ossining, are derived from an Indian name meaning "place of stone." Until 1901 the village had the name Sing Sing, but the residents objected to the association with the name of the prison, and after several attempts succeeded in changing it. The village of Sing Sing was incorporated in 1813, 12 years before the prison was established there.

Burial of Giantess

To bury a woman who died at Maguassi, South Africa, the services of 30 men were required. The coffin was 3 feet 4 inches high at the shoulder and 6 feet 3 inches in length. Twenty men had to assist in putting the corpse into the coffin, and 20 pallbearers lowered it into the grave. The deceased, who was a young woman, had been bedridden for a year. Owing to her weight a special bed had to be made on the floor.

Home-Making Helps

By Wanda Barton

Notes for the Needlewoman.

YES, women still sew, notwithstanding the fact that the shops are full of ready-mades. Women who make things at home, who are clever with their needles, find it economical to do their own sewing.

Of first importance is to understand the proper folding and cutting of goods to make the seams lie properly, to avoid their twisting and ruffling. The next thing of importance is the pressing. To do this well bring a lintless piece of thin white goods out of clean water and lay on the wrong side of the goods, then place a dry piece over it, using a warm iron, not a hot one, and steam the goods in the pressing. Then remove the damp cloth and iron over the dry one. If the iron is used on the goods it sometimes leaves a mark or makes it look shiny. Iron lightly and rather quickly so as not in any way to stretch the goods, especially if the weave is loose and the goods soft.

If old material is being made over or turned see to it that every thread and knot is removed, the material well brushed, sponged if need be, and all spots removed before it is pressed. If badly wrinkled hang over hot steaming water a few hours before it is pressed. Great care should be exercised in binding the seams, for it often makes sleeves set badly if done too tight. Notch the goods where possible, especially cloth and heavy silk that does not ravel.

Needlebooks with flannel leaves that are numbered should carry needles of the same numbers. They are easier to get at than when left in papers. Spool cases, where the spools are threaded on ribbons in rows, may be hung against the wall over the sewing table, where they may be used without tangling or rolling away when wanted. Stamped measuring cards are excellent to use for hems. Rolled tape measures always keep flat. A yard marked in inches on the edge of the sewing table is very handy. A spike driven into the wall over the table long enough to hold a large spool of basting thread may have a cork at the end to hold the spool in place

THRILLING STORY IN MYSTERY FILM

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has scored another triumph!

Without a dought "The Thirteenth Hour" at the Metropolitan theater is the most thrilling and entertaining mystery drama that the screen has had in years. Lionel Barrymore, supported by an excellent cast, gives one of the best permorances of his career in his portrayal of the role of Neville Leroy, the mysterious professor whose identity remains a secret until the last scene of the picture.

"The Thirteenth Hour" is an original mystery drama by Chester M. Franklin and Douglas Furber scenarized by Edward T. Lowe Jr. Chester M. Franklin, the director, deserves credit for the splendid way he handled the story.

Newspapers.

Prof. Maurice Hutton of the University of Toronto evidently doesn't think much of newspapers. Professors often don't.

"These are the days of newspaper government. But since people have not time to read them, the newspapers are far less influential than they were 80 years ago."

Somehow, this professorial logic seems a little queer. How can the newspapers govern, if people don't read them and they lack influence?

Not that a newspaper is eager to deny that we have newspaper government. This is a conclusion that many disinterested and intelligent persons come to, after careful analysis. The newspapers do govern, in a way, by enabling the people to govern through them.

They gather, arrange and publish, for all to read, the facts which are the raw material of public thinking. They give currency to all opinions regarding the public affairs and public men that seem worth publishing. They aid, as well as they can, in clarifying opinion. Thus they indicate pretty well, to public officials, what the public thinks and wants. The rest — legislation and administration — follows rather automatically, in a country whose government is based on popular will.

The statement that newspapers are less influential today than they used to be is, of course, absurd to anyone familiar with the history of the American press. There may not be many individual papers today which have quite the power and authority that certain leading papers had in former days. But there were few newspapers in the old days, and fewer good ones. Look up the old files and see. Today there are multitudes of good papers, the poorest of them infinitely superior to the average of 80 or 50 or 25 years ago.

In no previous time has there been anything like the adequate and disinterested presentation of news that there is today. And with the news go other things — entertainment, instruction and interpretation —that make a typical daily paper almost a library.

Don't people read them? How else could the papers survive? And what else do people read half so much? The usual objection of college professors is that our public doesn't read anything but newspapers.

Boulevard Lights Here.

From time to time during the past few months since the Chamber of Commerce started the valuable idea of having boulevard lights in Circleville, The Circleville Herald has received letters from interested readers inquiring as to why the project was dropped and why Circleville doesn't have this modern lighting system which has been installed in practically every city of 5,000 and over in the state of Ohio.

Circleville must keep pace with other cities if its townspeople and its merchants are to succeed.

For instance, a neighboring city, Washington, C. H., has had 27 new business fronts put on as many new business stores in the city, according to a New Holland woman who happened to be in Circleville just yesterday and who remarked that "Circleville is 25 years behind other cities this size."

Boulevard lights would not become a burden upon taxpayers. There are several ways they can be paid for. Abutting property can be assessed for all or for half their cost. Or the city, if it is financially able, can buy the lights itself. They cost very little.

Traffic lights were installed in Circleville, yet the city could probably get along without these. Many cities larger do not have them and in some cases tney are considered a nuisance. One Ohio city recently voted against installing them, declaring farmers who were shoppers did not understand them and tney hindered traffic rather than aided it.

Such as it may be, Circleville does need and should have—not a year from now, but RIGHT NOW—boulevard lights if this city is to present an attractive appearance at night to strangers who you would like to have live here.

Let's don't let people right here in our own county say that Circleville is 25 years behind times.

"Blood Will Tell"

One by one, science compels us to scrap our time-honored proverbs.

The latest to fall is the old adage, "Blood will tell."

Investigators from the University of Chicago have just made an extended study of 800 children, half of whom are orphans adopted by foster parents. It found that a child's intelligence depends far more on its home environment than on its ancestry. It found that 26 orphaned children whose parents had been feeble-minded were brought to normal intelligence by their foster parents. Furthermore, the general behavior of orphans whose parents had been morally defective was fully up to the standard of other children.

"Blood will tell," seems somewhat at fault. Perhaps a future generation will say, "Environment will tell."

The bright colors used on automobiles are likewise being employed in decorating farm machinery.—Bellefontaine, O., Examiner.

APRIL

How soon
Will
Come the April
Showers
With the happy
Spring
From thawing ground
A million flowers
And the weary
Hearts will sing;
The months that
Seem
Like sordid years
Have fallen by
The way
And I've forgotten
Winter tears
To greet a new-born
Day,
While from the
Fields a meadow-lark
Will call to me
To come
And skies that once
Were grey and
Dark
Are filled now with
The hum
Of flying birds and
Honey bees
And gorgeous scented
Rose
That come to me upon
Each breeze—
Alas! each spring
Soon goes
And leaves me longing
For the day
When it will come
Again
And lift me from a
Winter's fray
Like vi'lets in a
Rain—

And what we mean to say
Is,
Rebirth comes to the
Man who tries
To live once more anew,
Instead of giving
Way to sighs
And saying he is
Through;
The ground where once
A foot of snow
Had fallen with a
Thrust
Has lifted up its
Head, I know
A rose came from
Its crust

"THE JAZZ SINGER," starring Al Jolson, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel. It is based upon the play by Samson Raphaelson.

SYNOPSIS

Cantor Rabinowitz has trained his son, Jakie, to sing the Hebrew songs of the Synagogue. On the Eve of the Day of Atonement he finds Jakie singing ragtime in a "beer garden." He whips the child and Jakie runs away. Ten years elapse. Jakie, now Jack Robin, a jazz singer, meets Mary Dale, a dancer, who obtains a part for him in her vaudeville act. Mary returns to New York to star in a musical comedy and urges Lee, the producer, to send for Jack. Jack returns home. His father hears him playing jazz and orders him out. Meanwhile Mary awaits his arrival at rehearsal.

"That's just the point, Mary; I can't. Bolton's signed up with the movies—just yesterday. I got that straight from Tom Wheeler. And this whole thing's got me a little upset. We've got two weeks ahead of us, I know, but I don't want to take any chances and have to stick someone in at the last moment."

"Wait until you hear this boy. You'll be featuring him all over the place the day after we open. I tell you, Harry, I heard him sing in 'Coffee Dan's,' and it almost took my breath away. He's got something that none of these other 'Mammy' singers have—a personality combined with a voice that simply makes you choke. I don't know where he ever learned to sing that way, but it seems natural to him. I don't even know where he came from—he never told us anything about himself when we were on the road, but he's got 'it' and a lot more."

As they talked a young man opened the stage door and entered the hallway.

"I'm Jack Robbin," he informed the doorman, who hurried to bar the entrance of an outsider. "I want to see Mr. Lee."

"Oh, Robin—Robin—sure," the old man stepped aside to allow the singer to pass. "There's Mr. Lee over there. Do you know him when you see him?"

Jack shook his head.

"See that man over there in the gray suit with the cigar? That's him." The doorman pointed out the two figures in the wings.

But Jack had already seen Mary, and with a nod of thanks he hurried forward with outstretched hands.

"Mary!" he called. "Mary! Gee, it's great seeing you again." He caught the girl's hands in his and pressed them eagerly.

"Well, I'm frightfully glad to see you." Mary's face lighted up. "Mr. Lee's just been worrying his head off at your failure to appear. Harry—Mr. Lee, may I present Mr. Robin?"

The two shook hands and acknowledged the meeting with formal words. But instinctively Jack liked the man before him, and mentally he agreed with Mary's description of him as being a "frightfully nice person."

"When did you get in, Jack?" Mary asked.

"Why—not so long ago—just this afternoon. I—I went up to the hotel first, and that kept me for a while. I wanted to unpack a few things. As soon as I did that I came on right over here." Jack was trying to account for the time he had spent at his home, and succeeded. "But, Mary, I want to thank you for sending for me. I can't tell you how much—"

"That's all right, Jack. Let's not talk about it right now. I'll see you later and we can—"

"Here's your script." Lee finished sorting out the bundle of manuscripts under his arm and handed the part book to Jack. "You'd better listen in on rehearsals today and take your cues—read it. And then see what you can get done tonight. We've only got two weeks more."

"Thank you." Jack took the script and glanced over it. "I'll see what I can do by tomorrow."

"I'll give you the songs later. Can't seem to find them here. I probably left them in the office."

"I'm sure it won't take me very long to learn them, Mr. Lee," Jack assured the producer earnestly. "I'll work hard on them."

"Well, you've been very highly recommended," Lee turned to Mary with a rueful smile, "but we've only got one person's word for it that you can deliver."

"I've been telling him all afternoon to stop worrying about you," Mary declared emphatically, "but he still insists on being very serious over this matter."

"Oh, but I'm sure I can play this part, Mr. Lee," Jack insisted enthusiastically.

"Huh!" Lee growled good humoredly. "If you don't I'm sunk, because two weeks isn't so very long, and if this doesn't get over Dillings will be out a bunch of jack. Wait. I want you to meet Carter—Bob Carter, you know, the comedian. He's in the show. Hey, Carter. Can you come here a minute?"

A tall, gray haired man with cynically wistful eyes who was quietly hoofing over in one corner stopped dancing and looked up. He crossed behind the chorus at Lee's call and the manager introduced the two.

"Robin here's going to take over that part Bolton had," Lee explained to the older comedian.

"That's fine." Carter shook hands with Jack. "Where've you been playing? Have I seen you before?"

"I don't think so, Mr. Carter," Jack began.

"Mr. Robin has just come in from Chicago," Mary explained hastily. "He was with the "Little Follies" act out there and has been touring the West for some time."

"Oh, I see. Well, this looks like a pretty good show." Carter smiled at Lee. "Hope you like us. If I can do anything let me know."

"Thanks," Jack grinned happily.

"I want to run through that Dixie scene today. You come in there—you can just read the part," Lee explained to Jack. "Clear the stage for the Dixie scene, Gene." He turned to the stage manager, who also played the role of detective in the show. "Is everybody concerned in the Dixie scene here?" he called loudly.

The chorus girls now at rest lined up about the stage. The principals drifted on leisurely and took their positions.

"Everybody concerned in the Dixie scene stand by," the stage manager was calling. "Hy, Miss Glynn—Dixie scene!" He beckoned to a girl moving about in the wings and who came running on at his summons.

"Now all I want to get this afternoon are entrances and exits and positions." Lee crossed the stage and sat down in a chair beside the assistant stage manager, who was holding the script for prompts.

"Oh, Mary, but it's good to see you again. Don't run away rright now," Jack begged as soon as Lee was out of hearing.

"I'm not running away, but I've got to go on in just a minute now," Mary laughed delightedly. "There—Carter's on—"

"Mr. Carruthers, I'm from headquarters, and I tell you—" Jack could hear Carter's voice rattling off the lines.

"Mary, can't you have dinner with me tonight? It seems so long since I've seen you, and I want to hear all about everything." Jack caught Mary's hand and held it closely.

"And, what's more, he has been very disrespectful to your daughter, Gwendolyn," Carter was continuing, though Jack was paying little attention to what was happening on the stage.

"Will you, Mary? That is, if you haven't made any other arrangements," Jack amended hastily, fearing that he might have been too demanding.

"Gwendolyn, come here!" the stage manager was picking up his cue.

"I might consider it," Mary looked up at Jack mischievously.

"Gwendolyn, come here!" "That's your cue, Miss Dale," the stage manager looked about for Mary.

Jack, his eyes intent on the girl, moved backstage and found a prop chair out of the way and sat down and waited. He watched her move about, caught the charmingly graceful curves of her body, as she walked back and forth under Lee's direction. No wonder, Jack thought, Lee had chosen her for the lead. She was by far the loveliest there among the bevy of girls picked mainly because of their beauty. So absorbed was he that he looked startled when he heard his name being called.

DR COPELAND

It is a worthy ambition to strive for beauty. But honest beauty, or at least real attractiveness, is within reach of almost everybody. Study the homeliest of faces and there will be found features which are most appealing.

A very famous English woman told me once that she has good-looking ears, a remarkable nose, perfect lips, pretty hair, "but," she sighed, "they don't match up." "The ensemble," she declared, "is a failure."

But her wits and nimble mind, her sparkling eyes and animation of manner, more than make up for physical beauty which she denies having. Let me say at once, however, that I do not share this charming lady's estimate of her face. I think she is very good-looking.

After all, health is the prime essential. As I see it, the advice of physicians should be sought, not for operations, merely, but for directions about eating and sleeping and breathing and the care of the body. The correct physical conditions which are interfering with perfect health are far more important than to be chiseled into perfection of form.

Many a nose seems prominent because the cheeks are thin and wasted. A drooping eyelid is conspicuous, because there is no flame in the cheeks and sparkle in the eye, to take attention from the defect.

You can get more good looks out of a course of lessons in horseback riding than you can get out of a surgeon's kit.

Mind you, I don't decry the surgeon. He is a daily blessing to thousands of the human race. We couldn't get on without his skill.

But there are two reasons and two only for going to the doctor. You go to him to get well if you are sick. Better still, you go to him for advice about how to keep well.

The job of getting "beautiful" is your job, not the doctor's. He will tell you that the food he recommends and the manner of life he prescribes will give you health, provided—provided what? Provided you carry out instructions.

We can tell you what you should do, but unless you have the character to apply the advice, the fees are wasted. You are the one to fill the prescription. Nobody can do it for you.

When you are considering the possible effects of an operation which is undertaken for no other reason than to add to your appearance, do not forget that you may be worse off after it is all over. I beg of you not to overlook the hazards involved. You must consider very soberly the fact that every operation is attended with danger. It should not be determined upon ligthly. What you hope may add to your beauty can easily ruin it forever.

If you are determined to undertake or to consider such a procedure, I beg of you to make sure the surgeon is qualified and experienced. Never submit your body to the knife unless the operator is worthy of your full confidence.

Advice to Girls

By Annie Laurie.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a girl in my teens and have been going with a boy a bit shorter than I am. Lately he has not shown the same interest in me and I wondered if this had anything to do with it. Please tell me. DREAMY.

DREAMY: If this boy is particularly sensitive, it is possible that the fact that you are a bit taller than he causes him some discomfort. I do not think, however, that he would permit such a trivial thing to lessen his interest in you if he found you a congenial and charming companion. Perhaps you are the one who feels conscious of the difference in your height, and if so, it is possible that he sensed your attitude and ceased to be as attentive. If you make it clear that you desire his friendship and that you have no time for such unimportant considerations, I am sure you can become great friends and will not have cause again to think of the slight difference in your respective heights.

Newspapers.

Prof. Maurice Hutton of the University of Toronto evidently doesn't think much of newspapers. Professors often don't.

"These are the days of newspaper government. But since people have not time to read them, the newspapers are far less influential than they were 80 years ago."

Somehow, this professorial logic seems a little queer. How can the newspapers govern, if people don't read them and they lack influence?

Not that a newspaper is eager to deny that we have newspaper government. This is a conclusion that many disinterested and intelligent persons come to, after careful analysis. The newspapers do govern, in a way, by enabling the people to govern through them.

They gather, arrange and publish, for all to read, the facts which are the raw material of public thinking. They give currency to all opinions regarding the public affairs and public men that seem worth publishing. They aid, as well as they can, in clarifying opinion. Thus they indicate pretty well, to public officials, what the public thinks and wants. The rest—legislation and administration — follows rather automatically, in a country whose government is based on popular will.

The statement that newspapers are less influential today than they used to be is, of course, absurd to anyone familiar with the history of the American press. There may not be many individual papers today which have quite the power and authority that certain leading papers had in former days. But there were few newspapers in the old days, and fewer good ones. Look up the old files and see. Today there are multitudes of good papers, the poorest of them infinitely superior to the average of 80 or 50 or 25 years ago.

In no previous time has there been anything like the adequate and disinterested presentation of news that there is today. And with the news go other things—entertainment, instruction and interpretation—that make a typical daily paper almost a library.

Don't people read them? How else could the papers survive? And what else do people read half so much? The usual objection of college professors is that our public doesn't read anything but newspapers.

Boulevard Lights Here.

From time to time during the past few months since the Chamber of Commerce started the valuable idea of having boulevard lights in Circleville, The Circleville Herald has received letters from interested readers inquiring as to why the project was dropped and why Circleville doesn't have this modern lighting system which has been installed in practically every city of 5,000 and over in the state of Ohio.

Circleville must keep pace with other cities if its townspeople and its merchants are to succeed.

For instance, a neighboring city, Washington, C. H., has had 27 new business fronts put on as many new business stores in the city, according to a New Holland woman who happened to be in Circleville just yesterday and who remarked that "Circleville is 25 years behind other cities this size."

Boulevard lights would not become a burden upon taxpayers. There are several ways they can be paid for. Abutting property can be assessed for all or for half their cost. Or the city, if it is financially able, can buy the lights itself. They cost very little.

Traffic lights were installed in Circleville, yet the city could probably get along without these. Many cities larger do not have them and in some cases they are considered a nuisance. One Ohio city recently voted against installing them, declaring farmers who were shoppers did not understand them and they hindered traffic rather than aided it.

Such as it may be, Circleville does need and should have—not a year from now, but RIGHT NOW—boulevard lights if this city is to present an attractive appearance at night to strangers who you would like to have live here.

Let's don't let people right here in our own county say that Circleville is 25 years behind times.

"Blood Will Tell"

One by one, science compels us to scrap our time-honored proverbs.

The latest to fall is the old adage, "Blood will tell."

Investigators from the University of Chicago have just made an extended study of 800 children, half of whom are orphans adopted by foster parents. It found that a child's intelligence depends far more on its home environment than on its ancestry. It found that 26 orphaned children whose parents had been feeble-minded were brought to normal intelligence by their foster parents. Furthermore, the general behavior of orphans whose parents had been morally defective was fully up to the standard of other children.

"Blood will tell," seems somewhat at fault. Perhaps a future generation will say, "Environment will tell."

APRIL

HOW soon
Will
Come the April
Showers
With the happy
Spring
From thawing ground
A million flowers
And the weary
Hearts will sing;
The months that
Seem
Like sordid years
Have fallen by
The way
And I've forgotten
Winter tears
To greet a new-born
Day,
While from the
Fields a meadow-lark
Will call to me
To come
And skies that once
Were grey and
Dark
Are filled now with
The hum
Of flying birds and
Honey bees
And gorgeous scented
Rose
That come to me upon
Each breeze—
Alas! each spring
Soon goes
And leaves me longing
For the day
When it will come
Again
And lift me from a
Winter's fray
Like vi'lets in a
Rain—

And what we mean to say
Is,
Rebirth comes to the
Man who tries
To live once more anew,
Instead of giving
Way to sighs
And saying he is
Through;
The ground where once
A foot of snow
Had fallen with a
Thrust
Has lifted up its
Head, I know
A rose came from
Its crust

"THE JAZZ SINGER," starring Al Jolson, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel. It is based upon the play by Samson Raphaelson.

SYNOPSIS

Cantor Rabinowitz has trained his son, Jakie, to sing the Hebrew songs of the Synagogue. On the Eve of the Day of Atonement he finds Jakie singing ragtime in a "beer garden." He whips the child and Jakie runs away. Ten years elapse. Jakie, now Jack Robin, a jazz singer, meets Mary Dale, a dancer, who obtains a part for him in her vaudeville act. Mary returns to New York to star in a musical comedy and urges Lee, the producer, to send for Jack. Jack returns home. His father hears him playing jazz and orders him out. Meanwhile Mary awaits his arrival at rehearsal.

"That's just the point, Mary; I can't. Bolton's signed up with the movies—just yesterday. I got that straight from Tom Wheeler. And this whole thing's got me a little upset. We've got two weeks ahead of us, I know, but I don't want to take any chances and have to stick someone in at the last moment."

"Wait until you hear this boy. You'll be featuring him all over the place the day after we open. I tell you, Harry, I heard him sing in 'Coffee Dan's,' and it almost took my breath away. He's got something that none of these other 'Mammy' singers have—a personality combined with a voice that simply makes you choke. I don't know where he ever learned to sing that way, but it seems natural to him. I don't even know where he came from—he never told us anything about himself when we were on the road, but he's got 'it' and a lot more."

As they talked a young man opened the stage door and entered the hallway.

"I'm Jack Robbin," he informed the doorman, who hurried to bar the entrance of an outsider. "I want to see Mr. Lee."

"Oh, Robin—Robin—sure," the old man stepped aside to allow the singer to pass. "There's Mr. Lee over there. Do you know him when you see him?"

Jack shook his head.

"See that man over there in the gray suit with the cigar? That's him." The doorman pointed out the two figures in the wings.

But Jack had already seen Mary, and with a nod of thanks he hurried forward with outstretched hands.

"Mary!" he called. "Mary! Gee, it's great seeing you again." He caught the girl's hands in his and pressed them eagerly.

"Well, I'm frightfully glad to see you." Mary's face lighted up. "Mr. Lee's just been worrying his head off at your failure to appear. Harry—Mr. Lee, may I present Mr. Robin?"

The two shook hands and acknowledged the meeting with formal words. But instinctively Jack liked the man before him, and mentally he agreed with Mary's description of him as being a "frightfully nice person."

"When did you get in, Jack?" Mary asked.

"Why—not so long ago—just this afternoon. I—I went up to the hotel first, and that kept me for a while. I wanted to unpack a few things. As soon as I did that I came on right over here." Jack was trying to account for the time he had spent at his home, and succeeded. "But, Mary, I want to thank you for sending for me. I can't tell you how much—"

"That's all right, Jack. Let's not talk about it right now. I'll see you later and we can—"

"Here's your script." Lee finished sorting out the bundle of manuscripts under his arm and handed the part book to Jack. "You'd better listen in on rehearsals today and take your cues—read it. And then see what you can get done tonight. We've only got two weeks more."

"Thank you." Jack took the script and glanced over it. "I'll see what I can do by tomorrow."

"I'll give you the songs later. Can't seem to find them here. I probably left them in the office."

"I'm sure it won't take me very long to learn them, Mr. Lee," Jack assured the producer earnestly. "I'll work hard on them."

"Well, you've been very highly recommended," Lee turned to Mary with a rueful smile, "but we've only got one person's word for it that you can deliver."

"I've been telling him all afternoon to stop worrying about you," Mary declared emphatically, "but he still insists on being very serious over this matter."

"Oh, but I'm sure I can play this part, Mr. Lee," Jack insisted enthusiastically.

"Huh!" Lee growled good humoredly. "If you don't I'm sunk, because two weeks isn't so very long, and if this doesn't get over Dillings will be out a bunch of jack. Wait. I want you to meet Carter—Bob Carter, you know, the comedian. He's in the show. Hey, Carter. Can you come here a minute?"

A tall, gray haired man with cynically wistful eyes who was quietly hoofing over in one corner stopped dancing and looked up. He crossed behind the chorus at Lee's call and the manager introduced the two.

"Robin here's going to take over that part Bolton had," Lee explained to the older comedian.

"That's fine." Carter shook hands with Jack. "Where've you been playing? Have I seen you before?"

"I don't think so, Mr. Carter," Jack began.

"Mr. Robin has just come in from Chicago," Mary explained hastily. "He was with the "Little Follies" act out there and has been touring the West for some time."

"Oh, I see. Well, this looks like a pretty good show." Carter smiled at Lee. "Hope you like us. If I can do anything let me know."

"Thanks," Jack grinned happily.

"I want to run through that Dixie scene today. You come in there—you can just read the part," Lee explained to Jack. "Clear the stage for the Dixie scene, Gene." He turned to the stage manager, who also played the role of detective in the show. "Is everybody concerned in the Dixie scene here?" he called loudly.

The chorus girls now at rest lined up about the stage. The principals drifted on leisurely and took their positions.

"Everybody concerned in the Dixie scene stand by," the stage manager was calling. "Hy, Miss Glynn—Dixie scene!" He beckoned to a girl moving about in the wings and who came running on at his summons.

"Now all I want to get this afternoon are entrances and exits and positions." Lee crossed the stage and sat down in a chair beside the assistant stage manager, who was holding the script for prompts.

"Oh, Mary, but it's good to see you again. Don't run away rright now," Jack begged as soon as Lee was out of hearing.

"I'm not running away, but I've got to go on in just a minute now," Mary laughed delightedly. "There—Carter's on—"

"Mr. Carruthers, I'm from headquarters, and I tell you—" Jack could hear Carter's voice rattling off the lines.

"Mary, can't you have dinner with me tonight? It seems so long since I've seen you, and I want to hear all about everything." Jack caught Mary's hand and held it closely.

"And, what's more, he has been very disrespectful to your daughter, Gwendolyn," Carter was continuing, though Jack was paying little attention to what was happening on the stage.

"Will you, Mary? That is, if you haven't made any other arrangements," Jack amended hastily, fearing that he might have been too demanding.

"Gwendolyn, come here!" the stage manager was picking up his cue.

"I might consider it." Mary looked up at Jack mischievously.

"Gwendolyn, come here!" "That's your cue, Miss Dale," the stage manager looked about for Mary.

Jack, his eyes intent on the girl, moved backstage and found a prop chair out of the way and sat down and waited. He watched her move about, caught the charmingly graceful curves of her body, as she walked back and forth under Lee's direction. No wonder, Jack thought, Lee had chosen her for the lead. She was by far the loveliest there among the bevy of girls picked mainly because of their beauty. So absorbed was he that he looked startled when he heard his name being ca'l d

D. A. R. at Crites Home

The regular meeting of the Pickaway Plains Chapter, Daughter of the American Revolution, was held Monday afternoon, March 19, at the home of Mrs. Ella Crites, East Main street, with Mrs. W. T. Ulm, Mrs. Adrian Yates, Miss Charlotte Phelps and Miss Mary L. Wilder, assisting hostesses.

The meeting was called to order with the Salute to the Flag. Mrs. J. B. Stevenson read a paper entitled, "Strange Colonial Laws," and after hearing of these laws and the penalties for offences against them, one feels very grateful that one is living in this day and age.

Mrs. W. T. Ulm read an intensely interesting paper which she had written on the subject, 'The Cure of Souls." In this paper she showed that it is a fact that the cure of sick souls is just as necessary as the cure of sick bodies.

The Regent read excerpts from a book, published by the Paul Revere Chapter of Muncie, Indiana, on the life and works of George Rogers Clark, a much neglected man in the early histories of this country. Two copies were ordered by the Pickaway Plains Chapter, one to be placed in the public library and the other in the high school library. All public schools of Indiana are compelled to include this history in their curriculum.

Mrs. Felix Caldwell and Mrs. Clark Hunsicker gave splendid reports of the state conference held in Cleveland, March 13-16, which they attended as delegates from this chapter. It was announced at this conference that the Sesqui-Centennial committee, had presented to Gov. Donahey for the state of Ohio, the replica of the home of William Henry Harrison which was at the Sesqui-Centennial celebration at Philadelphia. Governor Donahey presented the building to the Daughters of the American Revolution of Ohio. The building is to stand on the State Fair grounds, to be furnished throughout with Colonial furniture such as was in vogue in William Henry Harrison's time and the building is to be open for inspection each year during the State Fair.

The chapter has been given permission by the owner of the land, to erect a suitable marker at the site of Camp Charlotte. Plans are under way for the erection of the marker to be dedicated with appropriate ceremonies in the early spring this year.

Light refreshments were served by the hostesses during the social hour. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Orion King, Tuesday evening, April 17, at 7:30 o'clock.

W. C. T. U. In Ashville

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Pickaway county, held an all day Institute at Ashville, Ohio, March 16, 1928.

The County President, Mrs. Lucy B. Price, presided at the meeting.

The meeting opened with singing several selections and the scripture reading. Plan of work for 1928 was then discussed. Reports of the county director showed that splendid work is being done in every department. They dismissed for noon and enjoyed a "box lunch" in the basement of the church. Executive meeting was held at 1 o'clock. Some very important subjects were discussed.

The afternoon session opened by singing and prayer. An exercise by Columbia and a number of W. S. presidents, ten ladies taking the different parts, was very impressive. The following topics, "Why A Dry Candidate For President" "Party Candidate or Dry Candidate. Which?" "Our Primaries,' were very ably ydiscussed by several ladies.

A Silver Medal Contest was held in the evening. The pageant by the Loyal Temperance Legion band was fine, much credit is due their leader, Miss Altha Pierce. It was a fine lesson for the young folks. The following ladies took part in the contest:

Mrs. Val Valentine, Tarlton.
Miss Mary Harpster, Kingston.
Mrs. Anna C. Hedges, and Mrs. Nelle Quillen, of Ashville.

Mrs. Hedges won the medal. The judges said it was very hard to decide the winner.

The fine musical selections by the High school orchestra, under the direction of Miss Crook, and the solos by Miss Opal Reed and Miss Elizabeth Hay, were greatly enjoyed by every one present. Thus ended a very successful W. C. T. U. meeting. The members wish to thank every one who helped to make it a success.

Magpie's Many Virtues

The magpie, which is quite common on the plains and mountains of the West, has many excellent qualities and as many bad ones. As an insect eater the magpie surpasses the crow and all other members of the same family. Destructive weevils, caterpillars and grasshoppers characterize its insect food, which forms nearly 36 per cent of its diet. The magpie also eats a limited number of small rodents, and as a carrion feeder it does additional good. The magpie has, however, some outstanding faults. It is guilty of the destruction of poultry and beneficial wild birds and their eggs, and at times becomes a pest on the cattle ranch by its attacks on sick, injured or weak live stock. There are times when the birds gather in such large numbers that it becomes necessary to kill off some of them.

ABSORBING SEQUEL TO "Revelations of a Wife"

By Adele Garrison

Madge Copies the Queer Characters On the Paper Taken From the Miniature.

LILLIAN bent over the queer marks upon the thin paper which we had taken from the secret compartment of Eleanor Lincoln's miniature, and after inspecting them carefully, shook her head at my question.

"I haven't your memory," she said. "It seems to me I've seen something resembling them before, but I'm no code expert. If Allen Drake were here now."

"It was when he was here before that I saw marks like these," I said, my excitement steadily mounting as the memory of a terrific struggle and a wonderful victory came back to me. "Don't you remember the man who called himself Smith and the plot against the Govern-with——"

"Against all governments," Lillian amended. "There was nothing small about that lad."

"I know," I said impatiently, "and don't you remember that we found a thin paper like this all covered with——"

"With characters from some dead language or other," Lillian interrupted excitedly, "that you were able to work out because you once had studied those old inscriptions with some decayed old professor who'd forgotten anything had happened since the time the characters were cut in the stone. Of course, I remember. You don't mean to tell me that these are the same sort of characters!"

"They are Sumerian, certainly," I returned, "but of course it would take days, perhaps weeks of work, to decipher the code."

"But how long would it take you to copy it line for line, dot for dot, just as the thing stands there?"

I looked the paper over carefully. "To copy and check, about an hour," I estimated.

"Get at it then, pronto," she commanded. "Do you want me here, or would you rather I held the fort downstairs and insured you against interruption?"

"Downstairs, if you don't mind," I told her smiling.

"In other words, get out and make it snappy," she said as she moved toward the door. "But I'm not proud, and this is manna straight from Heaven. Let me know as soon as you're through. I want to send off a code message."

That she was tremendously excited by the discovery of these characters used several years before in a code, which masked the secret plans of an especially diabolical set of plotters against the Government, I saw clearly. But my own excitement transcended hers. The deciphering of that code for Allen Drake had been the most signal triumph of my secret diplomatic work. In every thing else I had been only a very humble helper of Lillian's. But in that one instance it had been my knowledge of those old Sumerian characters, which had solved the whole problem for the Government investigators.

I could not believe that the characters before me had anything to do with a plot such as the others had masked. If our theory concerning the identity of Eleanor Lincoln were true, she would be the last person in the world to be in possession of a code connected with a revolutionary plot. But I had great faith in Lillian's hunches, and she evidently expected surprising and valuable revelations when I should decipher the meaning of the characters.

That was a long way off, I told myself sharply, as with pen and paper I set myself to the task of copying the characters. Mine is a single-track mind, and I knew that if I permitted it any speculation upon the meaning of the characters my copying might not be accurate. So I forced myself to consider only the exact reproduction of the lines and dots upon the thin paper.

Purposely I had named twice the time that I needed, for I wished to make two copies that I might always have one in reserve while working upon the other. And when two copies were made and each checked three times for errors, I locked them away in my desk, folded the paper exactly as it had been done originally and inserted it again into the cavity at the back of the miniature. Then, with a word to Lillian and bearing the chain pendant and miniature in my bag, I had Jim drive me again to The Larches. I intended to run no risk of dropping that bag until I had restored Eleanor Lincoln's treasure to her.

A Shampoo for the Blonde

By JOSEPHINE HUDDLESTON

ONE of the most important things the blonde has to contend with is the ever-present fear of the hair turning darker—a natural process as one grows older. Nothing except constant vigilance of the right kind can prevent this catastrophe, which is ruinous to blonde hair.

Bleaches of various sorts often hold out glittering promise to the blonde-haired woman, but this remedy frequently brings an entirely new set of hair troubles, such as breaking off, streaking and dryness, all of them needing further treatment, so that after all is said and done drastic bleaching methods are not the most satisfactory way of keeping blonde hair light.

After experimenting about for several years I finally evolved a shampoo which has been extremely successful, and I want to tell you about it today. The shampoo should be made up at home so that only the best ingedients are used and directions should be followed exactly for the best results.

To one pint of cold water add one bar of finely shaved lemon soap (use any good brand of lemon soap which you find at reliable stores) and one-eighth of a teaspoonful of powdered borax. Let this simmer over a slow fire until the mixture is dissolved; then strain it through two layers of cheese cloth and set it aside to cool. When cool it will be in jelly form and the amount should be sufficient for three or four shampoos. Keep it in a jar that can be sealed when not in use.

Now, then, to the amount of jell used for one shampoo add the white of one egg that has been beaten until stiff, folding it into the jelly with a fork. Use as you would any shampoo medium.

The lemon rinse should be used to finish off the shampoo and this is made by adding the strained juice of two lemons to one glass of cool water. After the final rinsing in clear water pour the lemon water over the hair, permitting it to dry.

This shampoo is absolutely harmless in every way and it will keep blonde hair in perfect condition if used once each week.

Last Straw

Two men by the same name in a little Ohio town were always getting confused. One was a minister and the other a lawyer, and the lawyer was constantly being annoyed with calls intended for the minister. Night after night he would get phone calls from couples wishing to get married, until it got on his nerves.

One night, close onto twelve, the lawyer got the usual call. "Would you mind marrying us tonight?"

"Yes!" shouted the lawyer, "I'm busy writing the other Smith's Sunday sermon."

Papal Claim Still Stands

In 1871 the Italian government absorbed as part of the territory of Italy much of the property over which the pope of Rome had exercised and claimed jurisdiction and possession. The Italian government placed to the credit of the Vatican a sum of money and certain guaranties which have not been accepted by the Roman authorities. It is said that the Italian government is anxious to adjust the matter, but so far the papal claim has not been diminished, which is temporal power or jurisdiction over the disputed territory.

Name of Sing Sing

The name of Sing Sing prison and also the name of the adjacent village, Ossining, are derived from an Indian name meaning "place of stone." Until 1901 the village had the name Sing Sing, but the residents objected to the association with the name of the prison, and after several attempts succeeded in changing it. The village of Sing Sing was incorporated in 1813, 12 years before the prison was established there.

Home-Making Helps

By Wanda Barton

Notes for the Needlewoman.

YES, women still sew, notwithstanding the fact that the shops are full of ready-mades. Women who make things at home, who are clever with their needles, find it economical to do their own sewing.

Of first importance is to understand the proper folding and cutting of goods to make the seams lie properly, to avoid their twisting and ruffling. The next thing of importance is the pressing. To do this well bring a lintless piece of thin white goods out of clean water and lay on the wrong side of the goods, then place a dry piece over it, using a warm iron, not a hot one, and steam the goods in the pressing. Then remove the damp cloth and iron over the dry one. If the iron is used on the goods it sometimes leaves a mark or makes it look shiny. Iron lightly and rather quickly so as not in any way to stretch the goods, especially if the weave is loose and the goods soft.

If old material is being made over or turned see to it that every thread and knot is removed, the material well brushed, sponged if need be, and all spots removed before it is pressed. If badly wrinkled hang over hot steaming water a few hours before it is pressed. Great care should be exercised in binding the seams, for it often makes sleeves set badly if done too tight. Notch the goods where possible, especially cloth and heavy silk that does not ravel.

Needlebooks with flannel leaves that are numbered should carry needles of the same numbers. They are easier to get at than when left in papers. Spool cases, where the spools are threaded on ribbons in rows, may be hung against the wall over the sewing table, where they may be used without tangling or rolling away when wanted. Stamped measuring cards are excellent to use for hems. Rolled tape measures always keep flat. A yard marked in inches on the edge of the sewing table is very handy. A spike driven into the wall over the table long enough to hold a large spool of basting thread may have a cork at the end to hold the spool in place

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has scored another triumph!

Without a dought "The Thirteenth Hour" at the Metropolitan theater is the most thrilling and entertaining mystery drama that the screen has had in years. Lionel Barrymore, supported by an excellent cast, gives one of the best permorances of his career in his portrayal of the role of Neville Leroy, the mysterious professor whose identity remains a secret until the last scene of the picture.

"The Thirteenth Hour" is an original mystery drama by Chester M. Franklin and Douglas Furber scenarized by Edward T. Lowe Jr. Chester M. Franklin, the director, deserves credit for the splendid way he handled the story.

MANY FARMERS BEING ISSUED AUTO POLICIES

Mutual Company For Benefit of Agriculturists Showing Big Progress.

More than 17,000 Ohio farmers have been issued policies during the past year, and the total number issued has reached a total of more than 24,000 in less than two year's time, it was reported last Thursday and Friday at the annual meeting of the Farm Bureau Mutual Automobile Insurance company. Representing this county in attendance at the meeting were George K. Wright, Ethel Brobst and A. C. Leist, Circleville, Ohio.

Approximately 250 farmer members and agents attended the meeting, as well as 45 County Farm Bureau office secretaries of Ohio, Stark, Wood, Mahoning, Columbiana, Lucas, Ashland and Licking counties were high in the list of counties ranked by the number of policies issued.

Delegates from this county report that the record of policies issued since formation of the company, when it is considered that only Ohio farmers have been eligible, is thought to be a record in insurance growth.

The organization was formed early in 1926 as a mutual organization to serve farmers, whose automobile risks are less than those of the city or average automobile owner. At the request of farmers of Maryland and West Virginia the organization recently expanded to cover those states.

Odd Fish From South Gathered For Exhibit In Northern Seaports

MIAMI, Fla., March 21 — Odd and unique fish from southern Florida waters and the Bahamas are being collected by Captain R. H. Green of the auxiliary schooner "Eugie" to form an exhibit which he will present in Northern seaports this summer.

Seahorses like weird little chessmen, electrical "rays" with all the habits of miniature dynamos; moonfish, wafer-thin and of lovely mother-of-pearl hue; pink butterfly fish in dainty colors; the porcupine fish which blows up like a spiked toy balloon and hundreds of the Gulf Stream will be included in the collection.

Mock Convention Is Planned at O. S. U.

COLUMBUS, O., March 21 — (INS) —Active and potential candidates for the presidency in the 1928 campaign will get an inkling of their fate at a mock national convention to be staged here April 17, by Ohio State university students. Similar mock conventions have been held here in other presidential election years.

In contrast to the quadriennial shows of the Republican and Democratic parties, however, the campus convention will be nonpartisan. It will have 600 delegates and will be held in the gymnasium. To give the event an extra note of realism, a speaker of national reputation is being sought to give the keynote speech.

Ducks Survive In Pennsylvania Cold

FRANKLIN, Pa., March 21 — (UP) — Franklin's "wild duck" colony, now numbering close to 50, is still intact, hovering close to the island of French Creek near here.

The ducks, a curiosity in Northwestern Pennsylvania, and only "tame" wild ducks in this section, it was believed have survived several ice gorges and floes.

They are fed daily from dinner pails by men going to work. A fund has been subscribed to feed them until spring.

Any of the prizes are worth working for, and if you don't win them a commission will be paid. "KIKI" CUYLER PROVING TO BE ASSET FOR CUBS

EX-CORSAIR IS HIGHLY PRIZED FOR HIS WORK

Acquisition of Pirate Star, However, Leaves Infield Strength in Doubt.

AVALON, CATALINA ISLAND Ca., March 21 —(INS) — Reviewing the training season today, as his Chicago Cubs were making read to break camp for the long trek east, Manager Jos McCarthy proceeded to reach around his abdomen, reading from left and to right, and shake hands with himself on the trade that brought Hazen "kiki" Cuyler to the club. Cuyler, a prominent man-about-the-bench with the Pirates last year, has been a "wow" with the Cubs to date, his hitting, fielding and team spirit having been the outstanding feature of the Cubs' exhibition games.

"I gave up a good man in Adams," McCarthy said, "But I got a better one in Cuyler. There isn't anything a great ball player can do that he hasn't done for us since reporting. He not only has been invaluable as an individual but has given much of his time and the benefit of his experience to the young players. If Cuyler hasn't strengthened the Cubs immeasurably, then I don't know what I am talking about."

Strength Needed

The 1927 Cubs needed some strengthening, as they proved when they blew their league lead in mid-September and wound up in fourth place. Bad infielding and a none too certain outfield defense completely nullified the Cubs' excellent pitching on that occasion. Cuyler's acquisition just about takes care of the outfield situation but the infield still has questions to answer before the Cubs can be rated a sure fire pennant contender.

They have the pitching, the hitting, one of the best catchers in baseball, "Gabby" Hartnett, and an inspiring manager who gets the best there is from the material at hand. But three of the four infield positions are far from water tight. Charley Grimm, the former St. Louis peanut vender, is one of the ranking first basemen in the league, and may be figured to steady the other infielders not a little.

Must Make Good

But he couldn't stop the Cub infielders from kicking them away last year, so the natural conclusion is that Johnny Butler, Los Angeles; Elwood English, Granville, O., Clyde Beck, Gardona, Cal., Freddy Maguire, Worcester, Mass., Norman McMillan, Latta, S. C., and Elmer Yoter, McKee's Rocks, Pa., must make good strictly on their own or the club infield will fall again.

Beck, English and Yoter were regular infielders last year, which may not be much of a recommendation. English, however, was coming along as a shortstop late in the season and generally is given the edge in that position now. Beck is his understudy and Yoter is acting in the same capacity for Butler, secured from the Brooklyn Dodgers. Butler is figurel to give the Cubs more steadiness at their base than they have known in several seasons.

Battle at First

Maguire, once with the Giants, and McMillan, once with the Yankees and several other clubs, are staging a great duel over Adams' former position at second bese. McMillan has had the call to date but those close to McCarthy believe he regards Maguire as the better prospect.

However, there is no doubt about the fact that the infield situation is far from re-asuring. The rest of the club is absolutely set. It has pitching strength second to none. Charley Root, Middletown, O., was the league leader last year; Hal Carlson, Rockford, Ill., was not far behind. John Blake, Beckley, W. Va., Guy Bush, Shannon, Miss., Percy Lee Jones, Dallas, Tex., and Bob Osborn, El Paso Tex., also contributed much toward this strength. All of them are back and so is Art Nehf, Phoenix, Ariz., veteran, who seems to have recovered much of his old skill. Phil Weinert, Philadelphia, Hank Grampp, New York, and John Welch, St. Louis, members of the 1927 staff, are still about too.

TAMPA, Fla., March 21—Beaten again by Washington here yesterday, 6 to 2, the Brooklyn Robins will attempt to turn the tables on the Senators today. Manager Robinson is still juggling the Brooklyn line-up, having benched Center Fielder Statz in favor of Babe Herman, erstwhile first baseman.

SPORTSMATTER

BY FRANK GETTY

The prospects for a sweep of American victories in the current year of widespread international sport competition are none too bright.

Accustomed as we are to considering the United States supreme in Athletic Endeavor, the year 1928 may produce some shocks.

In tennis, the United States already has lost all the worth-while prizes and has only a faint hope of regaining them this year. The selection of candidates for the American Davis Cup team, which is to practice this week under the captaincy of "Big Bill" Tilden is indicative of French superiority on the courts. The men upon whom Uncle Sam must draw for his Davis Cup challenge do not stack up, for real tennis class, against LaCoste, Cochet, Borotra, Brugnon, Boussus and the other French stars.

In golf, the British are likely to get back their open championship, for Bobby Jones announces that he will not defend it, and Bobby, after all, represents just about the margin of American supremacy on the links. A team of British amateurs is coming to this country to compete for the Walker Cup, and this will be the most important international test as far as golf is concerned.

The championship of the Olympic Games, which will be held in Amsterdam late in July, seems fairly saft for our own particular democracy. In all-around athletics, the United States has an imposing weight of numbers, and the best the other nations hope for this year is second place.

At that, the prospective American triumph is diminished somewhat by the fact that our athletes have not done well lately in the running events which naturally are the feature of the Olympic Games.

In 1924, at Paris, American athletes won but one race for individuals. Jackson V. Scholz of the New York A. C. won the 200 metres dash, but the other sprints, middle distance and distance runs went to representatives of rival nations.

The British did extraordinarily well in these events, Abrahams winning the 100, Liddell the 400, and Lowe the 800. The Finns, Nurmi, Ritola and Stenroos attended to the rest.

The indoor track season, just closed, has not produced any particular grounds for optimism as far as running is concerned. Lloyd Hahn alone has been able to break records and show promise of Olympic victory. And Hahn is going up against the stiffest competition of all at Amsterdam, and may have to tackle the job without the benefit of sufficient time to become acclimated.

American sprinters have not distinguished themselves this winter. Karl Wildermuth of Georgetown was about the most consistent in the Eas. Jimmy Quinn of Holy Cross equalled a world's record and showed his heels to the best of them in one New York meet, but Quinn seems to be an in-and-outer who cannot be counted upon. Jackson Scholz is finding the effort of "coming back" a trying one. In the west, Paddock and Draper have done well and are Olympic prospects.

As far as distance running is concerned, the United States seems to have given up hope. Even C. C. Pyle's cross-country run seems to be controlled by foreign plodders.

Tennis, golf and track do not by any means represent the extent of international competition this year. Already the Norwegians have skated off with all the honors on the ice and snow. There will be boating, fencing, fighting, swimming and what not. At boxing, the United States certainly is best and our amateurs should come back with most of the prizes. Otherwise, there is no great likelihood of an American sweep.

SPORTSMATTER

BY FRANK GETTY

The prospects for a sweep of American victories in the current year of widespread international sport competition are none too bright.

Accustomed as we are to considering the United States supreme in Athletic Endeavor, the year 1928 may produce some shocks.

In tennis, the United States already has lost all the worth-while prizes and has only a faint hope of regaining them this year. The selection of candidates for the American Davis Cup team, which is to practice this week under the captaincy of "Big Bill" Tilden is indicative of French superiority on the courts. The men upon whom Uncle Sam must draw for his Davis Cup challenge do not stack up, for real tennis class, against LaCoste, Cochet, Borotra, Brugnon, Boussus and the other French stars.

In golf, the British are likely to get back their open championship, for Bobby Jones announces that he will not defend it, and Bobby, after all, represents just about the margin of American supremacy on the links. A team of British amateurs is coming to this country to compete for the Walker Cup, and this will be the most important international test as far as golf is concerned.

The championship of the Olympic Games, which will be held in Amsterdam late in July, seems fairly safe for our own particular democracy. In all-around athletics, the United States has an imposing weight of numbers, and the best the other nations hope for this year is second place.

At that, the prospective American triumph is diminished somewhat by the fact that our athletes have not done well lately in the running events which naturally are the feature of the Olympic Games.

In 1924, at Paris, American athletes won but one race for individuals. Jackson V. Scholz of the New York A. C. won the 200 metres dash, but the other sprints, middle distance and distance runs went to representatives of rival nations.

The British did extraordinarily well in these events, Abrahams winning the 100. Liddell the 400, and Lowe the 800. The Finns, Nurmi, Ritola and Stenroos attended to the rest.

The indoor track season, just closed, has not produced any particular grounds for optimism as far as running is concerned. Lloyd Hahn alone has been able to break records and show promise of Olympic victory. And Hahn is going up against the stiffest competition of all at Amsterdam, and may have to tackle the job without the benefit of sufficient time to become acclimated.

American sprinters have not distinguished themselves this winter. Karl Wildermuth of Georgetown was about the most consistent in the Eas. Jimmy Quinn of Holy Cross equalled a world's record and showed his heels to the best of them in one New York meet, but Quinn seems to be an in-and-outer who cannot be counted upon. Jackson Scholz is finding the effort of "coming back" a trying one. In the west, Paddock and Draper have done well and are Olympic prospects.

As far as distance running is concerned, the United States seems to have given up hope. Even C. C. Pyle's cross-country run seems to be controlled by foreign plodders.

Tennis, golf and track do not by any means represent the extent of international competition this year. Already the Norwegians have skated off with all the honors on the ice and snow. There will be boating, fencing, fighting, swimming and what not. At boxing, the United States certainly is best and our amateurs should come back with most of the prizes. Otherwise, there is no great likelihood of an American sweep.

MANY FARMERS BEING ISSUED AUTO POLICIES

Mutual Company For Benefit of Agriculturists Showing Big Progress.

More than 17,000 Ohio farmers have been issued policies during the past year, and the total number issued has reached a total of more than 24,000 in less than two year's time, it was reported last Thursday and Friday at the annual meeting of the Farm Bureau Mutual Automobile Insurance company. Representing this county in attendance at the meeting were George K. Wright, Ethel Brobst and A. C. Leist, Circleville, Ohio.

Approximately 250 farmer members and agents attended the meeting, as well as 45 County Farm Bureau office secretaries of Ohio, Stark, Wood, Mahoning, Columbiana, Lucas, Ashland and Licking counties were high in the list of counties ranked by the number of policies issued.

Delegates from this county report that the record of policies issued since formation of the company, when it is considered that only Ohio farmers have been eligible, is thought to be a record in insurance growth.

The organization was formed early in 1926 as a mutual organization to serve farmers, whose automobile risks are less than those of the city or average automobile owner. At the request of farmers of Maryland and West Virginia the organization recently expanded to cover those states.

Odd Fish From South Gathered For Exhibit In Northern Seaports

MIAMI, Fla., March 21 — Odd and unique fish from southern Florida waters and the Bahamas are being collected by Captain R. H. Green of the auxiliary schooner "Eugie" to form an exhibit which he will present in Northern seaports this summer.

Seahorses like weird little chessmen, electrical "rays" with all the habits of miniature dynamos; moonfish, wafer-thin and of lovely mother-of-pearl hue; pink butterfly fish in dainty colors; the porcupine fish which blows up like a spiked toy balloon and hundreds of the Gulf Stream will be included in the collection.

Mock Convention Is Planned at O. S. U.

COLUMBUS, O., March 21 — (INS) —Active and potential candidates for the presidency in the 1928 campaign will get an inkling of their fate at a mock national convention to be staged here April 17, by Ohio State university students. Similar mock conventions have been held here in other presidential election years.

In contrast to the quadriennial shows of the Republican and Democratic parties, however, the campus convention will be nonpartisan. It will have 600 delegates and will be held in the gymnasium. To give the event an extra note of realism, a speaker of national reputation is being sought to give the keynote speech.

Ducks Survive In Pennsylvania Cold

FRANKLIN, Pa., March 21 — (UP) — Franklin's "wild duck' colony, now numbering close to 50, is still intact, hovering close to the island of French Creek near here.

The ducks, a curiosity in Northwestern Pennsylvania, and only "tame" wild ducks in this section, it was believed have survived several ice gorges and floes.

They are fed daily from dinner pails by men going to work. A fund has been subscribed to feed them until spring.

MURDER CASE IS TAKEN TO HIGHER COURT

Petition in Error For Walter Brown, Now in Penitentiary, Is Fled Here.

Petition in error in the case of Walter Brown, alias James Flint, who was recently found guilty of second degree murder in the Pickaway common pleas court, court, was filed Tuesday in the court of appeals of the fifth district by the defendant's attorneys, I. F. Snyder and Thomas Renick.

A new trial is sought for Brown, who is now serving on a life sentence at the Ohio penitentiary. He was convicted of slaying John Henry Hill, another railroad colored laborer, on Nov. 14, 1927.

The petition filed with the appellate court, before which the case will be argued during its April session here, asserts the common pleas court was in error seven times during the course of the trial and in its verdict.

The document says the verdict was against the manifest weight of the evidence; that the court erred in overruling a motion for a new trial; that the court erred in refusing to admit special instructions for the defense; that the court erred in admitting certain special instruction for the plaintiff; that the court erred in admitting certain evidence for the plaintiff over the objection of the plaintiff, and that the court erred in the rejection of certain evidence offered by the defendant.

EGG YIELD LOWER FOR FIRST MONTH

But Production of Recorded Flocks For Three Months Shows Increase.

Egg production averages on Ohio poultry farms for January of this year were smaller than for January a year ago, it is indicated in the monthly report of the Ohio State University poultry husbandry department for last month. The average egg production among 591 demonstration farm flocks was 7.1 eggs per hen for the month, as against 8.8 eggs per hen for January, 1927. For 1252 "calendar" flocks whose records are reported to the university, the average production was 8.2 eggs per hen, the same as for the same month last year. The standard production for January is 10 eggs per hen.

However, the total egg production for the three months ending January 31, was greater this year for both demonstration farm and calendar flocks, than it was in 1927. The three-month production standard is 23 eggs. The demonstration farm flocks have laid an average of 20.7 eggs per hen in this period, and the calendar flocks 20.3 eggs. The three-months' production for the demonstration flocks last year was 19.4 eggs and for the calendar flocks, 18.5 eggs. The gains for the period were made in November and December, and more than counteracted the drop in January.

MURDER CASE IS TAKEN TO HIGHER COURT

Petition in Error For Walter Brown, Now in Penitentiary, Is Fled Here.

Petition in error in the case of Walter Brown, alias James Flint, who was recently found guilty of second degree murder in the Pickaway common pleas court, court, was filed Tuesday in the court of appeals of the fifth district by the defendant's attorneys, I. F. Snyder and Thomas Renick.

A new trial is sought for Brown, who is now serving on a life sentence at the Ohio penitentiary. He was convicted of slaying John Henry Hill, another railroad colored laborer, on Nov. 14, 1927.

The petition filed with the appellate court, before which the case will be argued during its April session here, asserts the common pleas court was in error seven times during the course of the trial and in its verdict.

The document says the verdict was against the manifest weight of the evidence; that the court erred in overruling a motion for a new trial; that the court erred in refusing to admit special instructions for the defense; that the court erred in admitting certain special instruction for the plaintiff; that the court erred in admitting certain evidence for the plaintiff over the objection of the plaintiff, and that the court erred in the rejection of certain evidence offered by the defendant.
